HUD grant awarded for local apartment project

by Lindy Magner

One of four projects recently awarded federal funding to preserve low income and affordable housing within the county is planned for Lemon Grove.

Last Tuesday, the Board of Supervisors approved Urban County Community Development Block Grant (CDGB) housing funds to assist various non-profit organizations acquire developments for the purpose of persevering low-income housing.

One of those organizations, Occupational Training Services, Inc., will receive $552,000 for the acquisition of the Hillside Terrace Apartments on Federal Avenue, thus preserving the existing 20 percent of low-income housing units which were in jeopardy.

"We will be assuming the bond financing. This development was originally financed with county bonds with the stipulation that 20 percent of the units would have to be for low-income housing. The bond financing expires in 1996, and the owners had no plans for restructuring those bonds, so those units would have been lost," said Michael Wynn of Occupational Training Services, Inc.

The 20-year-old, non-profit organization devoted to employment training and assistance recently entered the affordable housing arena.

"We want to preserve and expand affordable housing because we feel that 'for-profit' developers are not meeting the housing needs of those earning minimum or low wages and spending more than 1/3 of their income on housing," Wynn explained.

He stressed that current residents of the 168-unit Hillside Terrace Apartments would not be effected by new ownership.

"No one will have to move if our purchase goes through," he said, adding that rents will probably be reduced.

Wynn estimates that the purchase will be completed in about six months.

According to Michael McWegan, program coordinator for the County Department of Housing and Community Development, this block of HUD funding flowed from affordable housing legislation adopted last November.

"About $1.9 million resulted from that legislation for home programs. In April, the county issued a notice of funding availability for low income/affordable housing projects for which non-profit organizations could apply," explained McWegan.

Occupational Training Services is hoping the city of Lemon Grove will also financially assist with the project.

According to City Manager Jack Shelver, city staff will be meeting with Wynn to discuss a grant of at least $25,000 towards the purchase of the property as well as maintenance costs.

"We indicated about two months ago that we would be interested in helping them," said Shelver, explaining that it would be a "one-time" funding grant. The major impetus for the city to offer financial assistance is to ensure that the number of low-income housing units here will be in keeping with state redevelopment law, said Shelver.

"If we assist this organization, it will help us in providing more low-income units within the City. The law requires the replacement of low-income housing knocked out by redevelopment agencies," he said.

However, Shelver stated that the apartment units will not be used for the relocating of residents being displaced by the Broadway Commercial Project.

Six knighted for efforts to save the Mount Helix cross

Supervisor George Bailey was the first of six to be knighted for efforts to keep the Mount Helix cross from being torn down. The ceremony took place on the set of the Chirlstian Community Theatre's (CCT) "Camelot" production opening night, July 23. Sean Carroll, Willis Fletcher, Roger Hedgecock, Dianne Jacob and John Mead were also knighted for their efforts to save the cross. Preceding the knighting, CCT hosted a reception for the honorees at the foot of the cross. The guests were also treated to a delightful presentation of "Camelot."

SDG&E undergrounding of utility wires underway

Construction is underway to convert overhead electrical, telephone and cable television wires to underground along Lemon Grove's west Broadway area.

Workers are now trenching and installing conduit that will carry power and communication wires in the mostly business and commercial area. Work will take place on North Ave., a short section of Federal Boulevard where it intersects College Ave., and on Broadway, between Massachusetts Avene and the entrance to Highway 94.

Once trenching is done - in about two months - workers will install cable and switching equipment, said Myron Schwab, construction project coordinator for San Diego Gas & Electric.

"The tentative date for finishing this conversion is December of this year," he said.

Pipeline to bypass San Miguel Avenue

A recent change in plans will spare residents of San Miguel Avenue the expected inconvenience of being without a street due to the scheduled installation of a pipeline there.

A recent change in design plans by the contractor for a section of the County Water Authority pipeline which will run from Mission Gorge Road to the Sweetwater Reservoir, will keep the narrow street in tact.

Instead of digging up the street, the pipeline will be tunneled underground, beginning at Palm Avenue and winding its way under San Miguel to Massachusetts Avenue, according to Randy Barber, resident engineer for the construction management company of Morrison-Knudsen.

"Due to the constraints of that narrow street as well as the low power lines and the abundance of underground utilities, the contractor felt it would be more cost effective to do the tunneling which in most cases is the more expensive way to go," said Barber.

"The benefit to residents will be that they won't be disrupted by an open trench. The benefit to the contractor will be a faster, easier way," he said, adding that the promised street improvements to San Miguel Avenue such as side-

College re-entry made easy

Adults interested in going back to college are invited to visit campus and learn coping skills from experienced adult students and staff members at Grossmont College's free Re-Entry Workshop. The workshop will be Tuesday, August 4, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Grossmont College Student Center Griffin Gate.

The workshop will include a panel discussion by re-entry students on managing school, family and/or career; information on admission, registration, financial aid, and other campus services; and placement testing. Guests should bring a personal calculator to use during the placement test.

To register for the Re-Entry Workshop contact the Grossmont College Adult Re-Entry Center by calling 465-1700, extension 648, or register at Griffin Gate on August 4.

The campus is located at 8800 Grossmont College Dr. in El Cajon. For convenient access to the workshop, guests should use parking area seven. The workshop is sponsored by the Adult Re-Entry Center of Grossmont College's Student Services Development Division.

Military Widows to elect officers at annual meeting

The Inland San Diego County Chapter, Society of Military Widows, will be having the election of officers for the 1992/4 period during the regular business meeting of Saturday, August 8.

The meeting will be at 10:15 a.m. at the Grossmont Baptist Church Hall, 5651 Water St. (Water and Milden), La Mesa. There will also be a short program of interest and a no-host luncheon to follow the meeting.

The Society of Military Widows welcomes the widows of career men from all five services. Further information may be obtained by calling 443-8804 or 465-2140.

Undergrounding project

"At that time, we will remove 15 wood distribution poles along the south side of Broadway and the north side of Federal Boulevard. We won't be removing the taller poles that cross Broadway around North Ave. because they carry transmission lines, which will not be converted."

Customers will be responsible for installing underground electrical and other service connections on their own property.

The project is being funded with $1.1 million in underground conversion money that has been given to the City of Lemon Grove by SDG&E. The company's underground conversion program has been in operation since 1967. Today, more than half of all SDG&E electric meters are served through underground wires.

The conversion program was implemented by the California Public Utilities Commission in an effort to beautify heavily traveled or scenic streets. The Commission also mandated that all new construction be serviced by underground utilities, except in rural areas or selected locations.

In the past 25 years, SDG&E has allocated more than $272 million to city and county areas in its service territory to pay for overhead-to-underground power line conversion work, said Eugene McElroy, regulatory services analyst. The local governments determine which utility services within their jurisdictions will be converted.

"For 1992, we allocated $28.6 million for conversion work, and expect to see about a nine percent increase for 1993," he said. "The allocation for most cities is based on the percentage of overhead electric meters in each community."

SDG&E's conversion program is coordinated and engineered by a group of project management specialists. The 11 employees who work on this spent 8,400 manhours of engineering time and 6,000 hours of coordination time on conversions during 1992.

"More than 55 percent of our electric meters are served by underground connections," said McElroy, "which makes SDG&E the only California utility with a majority of our customers served by underground distribution. California is still the only state to have a mandated conversion program."

SDG&E has 4,917 miles of underground wires serving 619,319 customers and 7,337 miles of overhead wire serving 502,746 customers.

Undergrounding of electric utilities in San Diego goes back to almost the start of this century. Circuit maps from 1910 show underground cable had been installed on lower Fifth Ave. and Broadway before that time.

Undergrounding of distribution lines (transmission lines are rarely undergrounded) has historically been much more expensive than overhead wire construction. Small, lead-cable, underground systems were built in Rancho Santa Fe and the La Jolla beach area in the 1920s and 1930s; Del Cerro was undergrounded in the 1950s. SDG&E's first big underground utility system was Rancho Bernardo in the mid-1960s.

Today, space-age insulation materials and new construction techniques make underground construction far easier than previously. Still it's expensive, says McElroy, averaging "$200,000 per block" for conversion work.

Countywide, 48.4 percent ($13.7 million) of the 1992 conversion budget was allocated to the City of San Diego with San Diego County a distant second at 16.8 percent ($4.6 million). All other incorporated cities divided up the remaining amount.

The quakes

The recent quakes have reawakened the fears of the California nemesis and the ever present conception regarding living here.

We certainly cannot fault (no pun intended) the thinking of Easterners when they are presented with the horrors of earthquakes in the movies and even some of the news footage about what has happened here in California now and then. Shortly after the Yucca Valley tremblers, the conversation resumed in the context of moving back East to where they "have no earthquakes." Even some seem to be seriously considering selling out to go back to Michigan or other "back home" places to many of us non-native Californians. Certainly anyone on the bridge in San Francisco, or more recently in the Landers area, could not be blamed for such thinking. However, from a Michigan transplant, here since 1948, I submit that we still have the best of it even with our occasional shimmy and shake.

A recent set of statistics in the news media compared the overall damage, in dollar value of property loss, repair of the disaster wreckage, and injury and death totals for human beings involved. They were quite surprising to locals who think that earthquake is the greatest calamity possible. The comparison was made with the damage inflicted by tornadoes and hurricanes that frequent the Midwest and the Eastern portion of our country. The difference was something like three to four times greater in all categories with the winds vastly outdoing the moving plates of our earth's crust. Growing up back there, I can certainly testify to that.

A young lady, newly-arrived in California, was seated beside me on the trolley the other day and we were discussing the recent quakes. She was terrified and already making plans to go back to Indiana.

I told her that in all of the years, since WWII, that we have lived here directly over the fault lines, in what is one of the the more likely areas to experience quakes, that she was unduly alarmed. The tremor in the early 1950s, was one I remember, with this past shake were the two worst that we have experienced. I told her that this last one was the most severe in all of our 44 years, and she had felt it. Most others were either very slight or not felt at all.

I recall a tornado sweeping through Grand Rapids Michigan and hitting a portion of my street about a mile from my home. Our friends huddled in the basement and watched their house whisked away completely from above them as if a giant broom was sweeping the land. The church where we were married, was blown totally away from its foundation on one side of a country road with an ancient clapboard farmhouse on the opposite side left completely intact, not even losing any of its loosely hanging shutters. Since we left there, many such demon winds have swept through, damaged and killed both man and animals. These disasters occur regularly back there and have as recently as last week.

For the Burns family, we are totally sympathetic with those who have suffered any kind of harm due to those natural phenomenon. We know about both of these kind of fearful events, and will take the earthquakes every time over the tornadoes. There are things that we can do to prepare for and cope with an earthquake, but a tornado is totally unpredictable and one is completely defenseless against it.

Our Southern California is getting crowded, and far be it from me to try to discourage anyone from moving, but it should not be solely because of fear of earthquakes. In this era of rock and roll, we are just occasionally getting into the act.

walks, curbs and gutters and repaving of the roadway would still be provided.

"We understand that the improvements are not a negotiable point with the city of Lemon Grove," he said.

According to Barber, tunneling of the pipeline is expected to begin in two weeks, and should be completed in eight months.

City Manager Jack Shelver stated that the city was "elated" to hear that tunneling rather than open trenching was now planned for San Miguel Avenue.

"There are numerous problems when you tear up a narrow road like San Miguel, and early on, we presented those foreseeable problems to the contractor, but we weren't in a position to be able to request that he tunnel," said Shelver.

The $130-million pipeline project began in March and is expected to be competed in mid-1993. The line will run through La Mesa, Lemon Grove and Spring Valley, and increase the Water Authority's capacity.

A number of contractors are involved in the pipeline project, including Arrieta Construction, Inc., Baxter Drilling, R.E. Hazard, Jones Geo Service and others.

Commentary

The Olympics

by Paul Treske

The best scenario we can make for the Olympic games, now at hand, is that they are not about war but about friendly competition. For two weeks, we are allowed to forget about war, venality and greed and, in their place, watch the finest young athletes compete in the manner that the ancient Greeks originally intended.

For two weeks, the concepts of faster, higher and stronger are stripped of their connection to jet fighters and super-tanks and applied to peaceful individual human endeavor. For two weeks, the youth of all nations and ethnic backgrounds mingle together in friendliness and safety, free of their national demands for conformity and political correctness.

The worst scenario, however, is something else. It is "business as usual" in behind-the-scenes politicking as nations and egos jockey for supremacy. It is athletes from "flesh camps," trained since birth to perform for their nations glory. It is the almost total dominance of the professional athlete over the amateur; a dominance so total that we no longer know or care what the word "amateur" really means. It is a feeding frenzy for the representatives of sports clothing and equipment manufacturers who want to make very sure that the members of their "stables" get top exposure. And it is the stealthy use of performance enhancing substances that cheapen world records and make the innocent into suspects.

Thus far, happily, the 1992 games appear to be leaning toward the former. Gone are the robotic, stone-faced contingents of the U.S.S.R. and East Germany. In their places are far looser, happier groups from the so-called "unified" team and unified Germany.

There are more nations this time around: Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania have fielded their own teams under their own flags for the first time we can remember; Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina are here but not the Serbs who are making the former Yugoslavia into a charnel house; South Africa is there in Barcelona with an ethnically mixed team and Israel, still haunted by the murder of its athletes by terrorists in Munich twenty years ago, defiantly participates.

Another positive sign is that steroid use appears to be on the wane in 1992 and the athletes will contend with their own skills rather than with the enhancement of drugs.

Of course, as I have noted before, there is something jarring in the presence of the so-called "Dream Team;" that group of basketball pros who will tower far over their opposition. I understand the argument: the other countries have been using pros for years and beating us at our own game, so why not send our very best? But in reality, we seem to be sending a howitzer to do a fly-swatters work!

But everyone (except their prospective opponents) seems very excited to see them in Barcelona, even if they are too rich, aloof and famous even to stay with the others in Olympic Village or, in some cases, march in the opening parade. And, bless his heart, Magic Johnson seems to be having the time of his life, and, since it may very well really be just that, it is a pleasure and delight watching him light up the crowds with his innate charm.

I have always been a sucker for the opening day Parade of Nations at the various Olympiads. I think it is the event's finest hour, as proud men and women enter the stadium behind their national flags. Most will never win a medal of any color, but it is their pride in being Olympians that is the most ennobling moment of their lives. In that opening parade all are winners, and that, perhaps, is the best scenario of all.

Safe parachuting and unnatural consequences

by Joseph Walker

I've got to lay off the late-night fruit punch and bean dip. I mean, how else do you explain the crazy dream I had the other night?

I'm in this plane circling about a zillion miles above the Grand Canyon, and I'm getting ready to jump. Not because I bet the farm on Angola to upset the Dream Team or anything like that. I was sky-diving, and the Grand Canyon seemed like as good a place as any to take a flying leap. At least, that's the way it was in my dream.

Anyway, I'm just getting ready to go out the door when my sky diving instructor approaches me. "Here," he says, shoving a bundle into my hands. "You might need this."

"What is it?" I ask. "Food? Water? Air Jordans?"

"No," the instructor intones solemnly. "It's your parachute."

"Oh yeah, Well, I can see where that might come in handy." So I start strapping on the chute while he reminds me for the umpteenth time of the parachute's safety features.

"Yep," he says as I lean into the wind rushing through the plane's open door, "these babies are incredible. They look good, and 90 percent of the time they actually open."

I pause in mid-leap. "Excuse me - did you say 90 percent of the time?"

"Yep," he says. "Nine-oh. I remember when most chutes'd only open six, seven times outta 10. Now we're all the way up to nine. That's what I call safe parachuting."

It sounds good to me, so I jump. (Yeah - right. Like I'm really going to risk my life on parachutes that are only 90 percent effective. Thankfully, most parachutes today are considerably more dependable than that. And besides, this is only a dream - remember?)

Free-falling is a wonderful feeling - for about two minutes. Then I pull the rip cord. It rips, all right. It rips right off. Ditto, the cord to the auxiliary chute.

Let me guess - I'm jumper number 10 for this particular parachute, right?

So I made a bad choice. I took a risk and I lost. Thankfully, it's my body, so it's up to me whether I choose to accept the consequences of my actions. And I choose not to. My body hurdles toward the earth at breakneck - if you'll pardon the expression - speed until I get about two feet from making the biggest impression I'll ever make on this planet. Suddenly I stop, step lightly to the ground and wait for my diving instructor's plane to land.

"What happened?" he asks, rushing up to me.

"Nothing. Absolutely nothing. The darn chute never opened."

"Then why aren't you ... uh, I mean, how come you ... well, you know ... ."

"How come I'm not a puddle on the ground here?"

"Well yeah - now that you mention it."

"Simple. I decided not to splatter."

"But how ... ."

"Hey, it's my body. I'll decide what happens to it."

"But didn't you make that decision up in the plane when you jumped?" my instructor asks. "I mean, excuse me for being a traditionalist, but I've always figured that once you set certain things in motion, certain results are inevitable. The minute you step out of an airplane you pretty much have to accept whatever happens from that point on."

"That's old-fashioned thinking," I insist. "Natural order, consequential principles and the first law of physics are pretty much null and void these days - at least as far as people are concerned. We don't worry about actions and reactions and stuff like that as much as we worry about freedom - you know, being free to have a good time, being free to do whatever we want to do whenever we want to do it, and being free of worrying about how our actions impact others. Unpleasant consequences are speed bumps on the road of life. So today we just ignore them - and put the pedal to the metal."

It's a good thing this all happened in a dream, because things don't work like that in the real world. I mean, who in their right mind would jump from a plane knowing perfectly well that their parachute isn't any more reliable, statistically, than ...oh, say, a condom, for example? And can you imagine anyone this side of a beer commercial believing they can dodge the natural consequences of bad decisions by simply saying "Hey, it's my body - I'll decide what's going to happen to it?"

Can you imagine logic like that? Only in your dreams, right?

It must have been the bean dip.

From Where I Sit

by Frank Andrews

My maternal grandmother came from Sweden and married a tall, lanky Norwegian named Hansen. They were both of good hearty stock from their native land. Grandpa Hansen worked very hard at the local General Mills plant hefting heavy sacks of flour for many years until his death in the early 1920s. Grandma lived a very frugal life, a few years longer, trying to take care of her two sons, Art and Bill. My mother's younger sister, Edith, died and left a teen-aged boy named Buddy Boy who also became a ward of poor old Grandma.

Before the Great Depression, Uncle Art was a salesman for the Crane Company - selling plumbing fixtures - and did fairly well at it. Uncle Bill worked with his father at the mill making flour until he was laid off because of the lean times. My motherless cousin, Buddy Boy, got into much trouble for my Grandma until she finally enlisted him in the Army at age 17.

Grandma purchased an extra large lot in an affluent area of northeast Minneapolis and built a beautiful brick duplex on it. To get rid of Art and his oncoming family, she built a long narrow house on the far side of the property - as far away as she could get him from her. Soon afterwards, Bill got married and moved upstairs in the duplex. With Buddy drifting in and out of jail before she got him in the Army, he was her star boarder.

All three of my choice relatives sponged on old Grandmother Hansen until welfare and then WPA (one of Roosevelt's legacies) came along. There was surplus food given to the poor along with soup and bread lines. Although things were tough, nobody really starved to death in the Depression days.

During those bad times, my Dad was the middle man in an illegal booze business and made plenty of bucks, some of which he brought home from the gambling tables. He always bragged, "All the Hansen family were deadbeats on welfare but not this old geezer, I work for my dough."

My uncles never did go back to legitimate jobs, but stayed on welfare until the day they died. I can remember my cousin Buddy going AWOL from the service and landing in the brig for a long stretch. When he got out of jail, Grandma had passed away so he hit on my mother for awhile, to my Dad's dispair.

Uncle Bill had a wonderful wife, Aunt Zoe. And, because they didn't have any kids of their own, I lived a lot of my childhood with them. Aunt Zoe was an excellent cook, mostly goodies for me, and Uncle Bill could pull the best taffy in town. Bill became or always was an alcoholic, just a plain old drunken bum in those days. Aunt Zoe couldn't trust him to go to the store alone as he would spend the dough for some kind of alcohol - such as bay rum, vanilla extract, antifreeze, denatured alcohol, canned heat, or anything else that contained alcohol. They found him stoned to the gills in a back alley one cold night when the temperature was well-below zero. They had to cut off nearly all his fingers on both hands as he was frozen stiff and nearly a goner.

When Grandmother Hansen passed away she left her house and all her hard earned assets to my father, as she couldn't trust her own family. This was the basis for most of my folks "knock-down, drag em' out" brawls. My Dad finally turned over the remains of Granny's money to the brothers, only after he had bought himself some goodies that he always wanted.

The moral dilemma of my true story is: "Is it better to live on welfare, the taxpayer's money, or to sell illegal liquor like my father did without any help from the taxpayers?"

Women artists featured at Grove exhibit

COVA and the MarketPlace at the Grove present a women's show, "Saints of Salvage," in the Gallery at the Grove for the month of August, featuring ten women artists.

Continuing the exhibition series at the Gallery at the Grove is "Saints of Salvage," an exhibition of ten women artists whose works reflect a spiritual search for self in an attempt to deal with such issues as abuse, sexism, sexual orientation and other societal pressures.

The artists are: Darcy Abrahams, C.E. Barksdale, Nancy Loeber, Kim O'Grady, Kate Palese, Leslie Von Kolb, Alexia Markarian, Rosemary Boost, Lynda Ross, and Ollie Zinn.

The exhibition will run from Friday, August 7, through August 30, 1992 with a special reception to meet the artists on Friday, August 7, 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

The Gallery at the Grove is open Friday 6-9 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday noon-6 p.m. through August.

Junior Theatre stages 'Androcles and the Lion'

San Diego Junior Theatre will present the classic Roman fable "Androcles And The Lion" in the ancient Commedia Dell'Arte style of improvised theatre, July 31 through August 9 at the Casa del Prado Theatre in Balboa Park.

Director Lois Wetzell describes the show as, "an audience participation romp with a 16th century Italian acting troupe. It is a high energy, zany version of the popular Roman fable that shows 'how a friend is won by a kindness done.'"

Junior Theatre's production of "Androcles And The Lion" features original music written expressly for this production by Artistic/Musical Director, Michael Erickson and his collaborator, Tim O'Brian.

The production is performed and crewed by Junior Theatre student ages 8-18. Tickets are $5, $6, and $7. Group discounts are available.

For ticket information and reservations call the box office at 239-8355.

Workers' Compensation law changes

Have you experienced a huge increase in Workers' Compensation claims in the past year? Are your Workers' Compensation premiums skyrocketing as a result of dubious claims? If so, you can now take action to determine if these claims are legitimate.

Under a new law which went into July 1, California employers stung by the soaring increases in the cost of Workers' Compensation insurance will be able to report suspected fraud directly to special investigative units within each Workers' Compensation insurance company. The insurers will then turn cases of suspected fraud over to the California Department of Insurance's newly created Workers' Compensation Fraud Investigation Unit.

The new state law mandates all Workers' Compensation insurance carriers to establish Special Investigative Units (SIUs) solely to investigate fraud. Only one or two other states currently have such programs.

After a suspected fraud is referred to the insurance company investigative unit by an employer, the unit conducts a preliminary investigation. If evidence of fraud is uncovered, the SIU will then contact the department's Workers' Compensation fraud unit for further investigation and prosecution. The department's new unit is comprised of 16 investigators with extensive law enforcement experience. Legislation passed last year enacted the new unit and provided $3 million to the department and county district attorneys to investigate and prosecute Workers' Compensation fraud.

As a result of the new emphasis on Workers' Compensation fraud, in the first six months of this year, there has been more than a ten-fold increase in the rate of cases reported to the Department of Insurance. Over 15 arrests have been made, a number of them professionals such as attorneys, doctors, other medical care workers and insurance company employees. These are the people the department is targeting to drive out of business.

"California businesses are being strangled by exorbitant Workers' Compensation premiums, in part because of fraudulent claims," said California Insurance Commissioner John Garamendi. "If businesses work with us by reporting suspected fraud to their insurers, we can target and apprehend the worst abusers of the system."

If you suspect that a Workers' Compensation claim by one of your employees or former employees is fraudulent, immediately contact the new fraud unit established by your carrier. If not satisfied by the response, call the toll-free hotline established by the Department of Insurance: (800) 927-HELP.

Volunteers sought by HICAP

HICAP is a nonprofit organization which offers free counseling and legal services to Medicare beneficiaries.

Community Band to perform three concerts this month

The 100-member La Mesa Community Band, which claims some talented Lemon Grovans amongst its members, will present its second free concert of the summer on Sunday, August 2 at 6 p.m., at Harry Griffen Park in La Mesa (behind Grossmont High School at Milden and Water Streets). Under the batons of Charles D. Yates and Warren Torns, the concert will include foot-tapping marches and other familiar music.

The band will perform two more concerts this summer: at the Balboa Park Organ Pavilion, 6:30 p.m. on Wednesday, August 5 and at Harry Griffen Park, 6 p.m. on Sunday, August 16.

Well, no one said it would be easy

by Dr. Jerry Legerton, City Councilmember

In fact, I was sure it would not be easy. Yet, at the time of declaring my candidacy for City Council, I didn't expect the potential for major crisis to begin immediately.

As soon as the fine city staff guided me to the bin for my incoming mail, I began to read of the maneuvering at the state level to take a portion of the revenue that now comes to cities. I was well aware of the terrible example of corporate responsibility manifested by our state legislators resulting in the deficit and capital shortfall. I suppose deductive reasoning should have told me that they would come after the cities to help solve their budgetary woes.

At the same time, I was made aware of the disappointment of many Lemon Grove children at the absence of the Penny Faire which would have coincided with the Concert in the Park on July 21. The cancellation was part of the budgetary cutback from reduced sales tax revenue from the loss of the Toyota dealership and the recessionary business climate. While a service like the Penny Faire may seem trivial to some, it was an event enjoyed by our community and supported by our city staff and therefore by city revenue. It is a reminder that every disappointed child can clearly attest of the function of "cities" verses the function of "states." It is our city that maintains our streets and sewers, provides for our safety with law enforcement and firefighting, and contributes to our culture through the arts, youth and senior programs.

City government is the interface where the tires meet the road. Our city budget of approximately $5 million has already been trimmed with some reduction in services and programs. In Sacramento, the "Hill-Isenberg" bipartisan proposal is under discussion. This may result in a shift in property tax, cigarette tax and redevelopment revenue. The city manager has calculated the impact to Lemon Grove in a current "best case" and worst Case" scenario: The best being a loss of approximately $300,000, and the worst case of $1 MILLION per year. The best case is a crisis; the worst case is a disaster.

Mayor Cochran has communicated with Assemblyman Chacon and Senator Deddeh. I encourage you to do the same. We may all have our pet programs and higher priority services (i.e., fix Federal Blvd, graffiti reduction, senior nutrition, etc,). With revenue reductions of this nature, there is a threat of reduction in all areas and little hope for expanding programs and services.

There is hope

Lemon Grove can be viewed as its own economy, It derives its revenues from within (if left alone by the state and federal governments). The principal sources of revenue are sales tax, property tax and vehicle license fees. Secondary sources are gasoline taxes, cigarette taxes, licenses and citations. For those who desire stronger programs and enhanced vitality of services, remember that they are possible if our locally collected sales taxes are greater. The message here is, SHOP IN LEMON GROVE. The economy of Lemon Grove is strengthened when we conduct our purchases here. Many of us spend our dollars with businesses outside Lemon Grove. Doing so supports the area in which you purchase which is not the area where you live. With our city facing shrinking revenues, it is good to do your business and make your purchases locally. A small shift in this direction by many can result in significant increases in sales tax revenue.

In sharing this view with others previously, I have heard several responses:

1. Lemon Grove does not have the businesses I need.
2. Shopping is not as convenient in Lemon Grove.
3. The businesses are not user-friendly.

If these are your reasons for shopping elsewhere with a resultant loss of revenue to the city from which you want good services and programs, I need your help. I pledged that I would work to strengthen Lemon Grove and I would do so by assisting in the recruitment of new businesses and the strengthening of existing ones resulting in increased sales tax revenues. To do so, I need to know what businesses you need. At the same time, I am working closely with the Chamber of Commerce and I strongly desire your input to help Lemon Grove businesses become more convenient and user-friendly.

I have discussed my concept of a marketing study for Lemon Grove with the city manager. Properly conducted, this would profile the businesses desired by a large segment of our residents. The end product would be useful in recruiting businesses that would fit our unique needs. I hope such a study is forthcoming.

At the present, your individual input is welcome. Drop a note to me regarding the products and services you would like in Lemon Grove and your suggestions for existing businesses to be easier to access and more user-friendly in order to get your patronage. Send your comments to:
